

26 Views of Uluru

by Alex Byrne

These works were created on Gadigal land. I acknowledge the Gadigal people and pay my respect to the Elders, past, present and future. Always was, always will be Aboriginal land!

Uluru epitomises the spirit of Australia's ancient land and people in this series of 26 etchings and aquatints by Alex Byrne. Accompanied by several distressed books, they present both an artistic critique of Australia's colonial and post colonial history and attempt a corrective to the oblivion of Indigenous Australia in our literary classics, a whitewashing that continues to shape our public discourse.

Referencing Katsushika Hokusai's famous series of woodblock prints, Thirty-six Views of Mount Fuji, the etchings and aquatints present a white Australian's graphic interrogation of the shameful national history of white-black relations. From the inscription of new names onto the land to 'dispersal' of peoples, removing children, forbidding language and 'intervention' into contemporary communities, White Australia has attempted to destroy, diminish and demean Black Australia. Few whites have recognised – and recognise – the courage and resilience of the response to that wilful ignorance and brutality.

The exhibition challenges attitudes that continue to be widely held on the eve of the 250th anniversary in 2020 of the charting and claiming of Australia's east coast by James Cook. Despite his achievements as a great navigator and mapmaker, Cook opened the Pacific to colonial exploitation and oppression and he has come to be viewed as a symbol of the invasion of traditional lands and cultures that followed.

In Australia, that invasion was followed by 'the great Australian silence' about Indigenous people and their cruel dispossession. Our writers participated in that silencing when they ignored, minimised or disparaged first nation experience and culture. This exhibition challenges that silence via the prints and by showing a random sample of literary classics that have been 'distressed' by including pop-ups and words from the most relevant Indigenous language to 'correct' each book's omissions. Notes on the books and the sources of the languages are on my website.

I am most grateful to Indigenous individuals and organisations who responded to my requests for advice on the content of this exhibition. I have followed that advice.

Exhibitions

2016 Murmurs of the Heart at Gaffa Gallery, Sydney

2018 Dunera at Hay Shire Library, Hay

Prints and artists books in private collections and the State Libraries of Queensland and NSW.

Practice

Recent work has focussed on exploring an artistic perspective on Australia's history and our treatment of Indigenous peoples. Currently working on a series of prints dealing with our rivers, their history and the environmental crisis caused by long term mismanagement.
